Sara Karon, Ph.D., is an Associate Scientist at the University of Wisconsin’s Center for Health System Research and Analysis. She conducts research in the areas of quality: what is it, how do you measure it, what do you after you’ve measured it. She also is involved in the evaluation of programs and services, and in studies of access to care. She has worked for over 20 years on issues related to long-term care services for elders and people with disabilities through the lifespan. Her work addresses a range of care settings, both community-based and residential. Dr. Karon has a strong commitment to work that is person-centered and empowering. Outside of her work, she is involved with the Disabled Womyn’s Educational Project, which has produced Able Images Live!, a theater experience by, for, and about women with disabilities.
